Name of Event: "National Technology Day" celebration.

Academic Year:2023-24

Date of Event: 11/05/2024

Class of Student Participated: UG students

Number of Students participated: 38

Number of Faculty participated: 02

Staff Incharge: Ms.Minal Chaudhari

Objective:

- To provide students with a comprehensive understanding of how nanoparticles are revolutionizing drug delivery systems, emphasizing their potential to enhance targeted therapy, reduce side effects, and improve patient outcomes

Summary of event:

Institute organize online guest lecture for our students to add on their knowledge about Nanoparticals in Drug Delivery System on an occasion of word nanotechnology day So Ms. Pranali P. Hatwar (Asst. Professor, L. B. Y.P. College of Pharmacy, Aurangabad) delivered guest lecture on "Nanoparticals in Drug Delivery System" on 11/05/2024.

Key Outcome:

- Gain insights into how nanoparticles are utilized in drug delivery, understanding their role in modern medicine.
- Comprehend the mechanisms behind nanoparticle targeting, deepening knowledge in drug delivery principle.

Objective:

- Educate and awareness raise about women's equality.
- Call for positive change advancing women.

Summary of event:

Institute organized the women's day celebration event at APJ Abdul kalam Hall, Where Damini Pathak of Satara police station are present on this occasion to educate and aware to the girl's students about their safety. All participated students present their act on theme women's power and ability to do different carrier.

Key Outcome:

- Celebrate women's achievements, Educate and awareness rise about women's equality.

(57) Abstract :

The invention relates to the development and validation of lipid-based microsuspensions designed for ophthalmic Tobramycin delivery. These lipid-based microsuspensions offer a transformative approach to enhance the solubility, bioavailability, and therapeutic efficacy of Tobramycin in the treatment of ocular infections. The innovation comprises Tobramycin encapsulated within lipid particles dispersed in an aqueous medium, facilitating efficient transport across ocular barriers and providing sustained drug release. This results in improved bioavailability, reduced dosing frequency, and enhanced patient compliance. Rigorous validation studies have affirmed the safety, efficacy, and stability of this novel drug delivery system, offering hope for improved patient outcomes and a new standard of care in ophthalmology. Additionally, the invention's adaptability for use with other ophthalmic drugs underscores its potential to revolutionize ocular drug delivery. Accompanied Drawing [FIGS. 1-2]

(57) Abstract :

The present invention relates to the an Ayurvedic preparation for treating surface warts was developed and standardized. The formulation comprised lemon oil at linseed oil, combined in varying proportions. The prepared formulations underwent comprehensive characterization using gas chromatography-mass spectroscopy (MS), Fourier-transform infrared spectroscopy (FT-IR), Ultraviolet-Visible Spectroscopy (UV), and various physicochemical parameters such as saponification v density, acid value, iodine value, and refractive index. Subsequently, the optimized formulation was selected based on the characterization results and subjected t clinical trial involving human volunteers who provided informed consent. The formulation's stability was also evaluated under controlled conditions of 30 ± 2°C ± 5% RH. This holistic approach contributes to a standardized Ayurvedic solution for surface warts, encompassing formulation, characterization, clinical assessm and stability analysis.

(57) Abstract :

[028] The invention presents a Formulation, Optimization, and Evaluation of Aloe Vera Gel for Enhancing Wound Healing. The present invention comprising of a wound healing formulation comprising Aloe vera gel as an active ingredient, wherein said formulation is optimized to promote enhanced wound healing while exhibiting increased stability and bioavailability when compared to conventional Aloe vera gel formulations. The optimization process includes adjusting the concentration of Aloe vera gel, additives, preservatives, and other excipients to maximize its therapeutic efficacy and minimize potential adverse effects. A method for formulating and optimizing Aloe vera gel for wound healing, comprising the steps of selecting suitable excipients, optimizing Aloe vera gel concentration, and performing stability and bioavailability tests to achieve an enhanced wound healing formulation.
